

City of London Police has made good progress in achieving its savings for the comprehensive spending review period.

Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC) has today published a report on City of London Police's progress in meeting the challenges of the 2010 comprehensive spending review.

A thematic report, Policing in Austerity: One Year On, found that police forces across England and Wales have risen to the financial challenge of the spending review, cutting their spending while largely maintaining the service they provide to the public; but HMIC has some concerns about whether all forces have transformed their efficiency to the extent that this can be sustained through the next three years (and into future spending reviews).

Based on the data provided by the force, HMIC found that:

- City of London Police needs to save £17 million between March 2011 and March 2015. By spring 2012 they had planned how to save 100% of this amount.
- The force is planning to cut its total workforce number (i.e. police officers, police staff and police community support officers) by 270 between March 2010 and March 2015.
- 140 of these will be police officer posts; this means there will be 16% fewer officers in the City of London (compared with the 10% average officer reduction across England and Wales).
- By 2015, 67% of its workforce will be in the frontline. This is lower than the national figure.
- The proportion of officers in frontline roles will increase between March 2010 and March 2015 (from 79% to 82%). However, this again is a lower proportion than in most other forces.
- While overall crime fell across England and Wales between December 2010 and December 2011, it increased slightly in the City of London. However, crime levels are still the lowest of all 43 forces.
- 86% of victims were satisfied with the service they received from City of London Police. This is in line with national figures.

HM Inspector of Constabulary for the National Region, Stephen Otter, said:

"City of London Police has put in place a comprehensive change programme to manage the reductions in its budget outlined in the 2010 spending review. As a result they are in a good position to achieve their savings target by March 2015 – and may even exceed it.

“Although the City of London Police is cutting police officer posts, the proportion of its officers in frontline policing roles will increase by 2015. This should help the force to reverse the slight increase in crime and keep the public safe.”

6. Her Majesty’s Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC) is an independent inspectorate, inspecting policing in the public interest, and rigorously examines the effectiveness of police forces and authorities to tackle crime and terrorism, improve criminal justice and raise confidence. HMIC inspects and regulates all 43 police forces in England and Wales together with other major policing bodies such as the Serious Organised Crime Agency, the Police Service of Northern Ireland and the British Transport Police and HMRC.
7. HMIC’s out-of-hours press office line for urgent media enquiries is 07836 217 729.
8. Her Majesty’s Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC) carried out an inspection of all 43 police forces in England and Wales in spring 2011, to see how they were planning to meet this financial challenge. When the results were published in July 2011 (search for ‘Valuing the Police’ on www.hmic.gov.uk), we committed to returning one year later to report on progress, and to assess whether there had been any impact on the service provided to the public.
9. The 270 workforce reduction is a net change in posts, taking account of an increase in the number of police staff.
