

Part 3: Our reports

36
reports published

Our reports

Between 1 April 2021 and 30 November 2021, we published 36 reports, which are all available on our website.

As well as our work with the 43 Home Office forces, and the other inspectorates, we carried out various other inspections. These are part of our statutory duties to inspect non-Home Office police forces and certain other law enforcement agencies. We gave our reports for these inspections to the relevant Secretaries of State. Except where national security considerations precluded it, these were then published on our website.

Information sources

The inspectors of constabulary obtain information about police forces in seven principal ways:

- in the police and crime plan in respect of each force, to enable them to understand the priorities of the local policing body;
- through in-force inspections (otherwise referred to as fieldwork), and the work which forces do to prepare for in-force inspections;
- through regular monitoring of and liaison with forces, primarily through the inspectorate's force liaison staff and the contacts maintained by inspectors of constabulary and force liaison leads with chief officers, local policing bodies and others;
- through the formal provision of information and documents requested of forces for the purposes of inspection (including their data returns to the inspectorate and their force management statements);
- from their annual data returns to the Home Office;
- from information provided by forces to the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy in relation to the costs of individual and specific police functions such as investigations, call-handling, response and corporate support; and

- from information and intelligence available from sources outside policing, including in media reports, reports of proceedings in Parliament and local institutions, other regulatory bodies or inspectorates concerned with safeguarding and the prevention of crime and disorder or their consequences, academic bodies, public policy institutions (such as think tanks) and commentators, and official publications such as the Crime Survey of England and Wales.

Over the next few pages, we have listed our reports, along with:

- a short description of the inspection’s focus;
- the names of the other inspectorates, if it was a joint inspection;
- the publication date; and
- the name(s) of Her Majesty’s Inspector(s) (HMI) responsible for the inspection.

- 4 In our inspection reports and other published documents, we often refer to ‘victims’ of crime. In very many cases, the people in question are victims and offences have been committed against them, and the position is clear. However, and depending on context, it must be understood that when we use this term in relation to circumstances where it has not been established that an offence has been committed, or who is the person against whom an offence was committed, we are referring to the person who (a) says he or she is the person against whom that offence was or may be committed; or (b) is said or considered by another person to be the person against whom that offence was or may be committed.
In using the term ‘victim’, there is no suggestion that the fundamental criminal justice principle of the presumption of innocence of a suspect or accused person is being disregarded.

Part 2

- 1 We publish our accelerated causes of concern promptly; they are inspection reports under section 54, Police Act 1996 and published under section 55. As such, they require to be responded to by the relevant local policing body under section 55(5A) and, where appropriate, section 55(5B).
- 2 Strategic Policing Requirement, Home Office, March 2015. Available at: <https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/strategic-policing-requirement>
The strategic policing requirement is a document issued by the Home Secretary under section 37A, Police Act 1996, which sets out the Home Secretary's view of what are national threats (actual or prospective) which are threats to national security, public safety, public order or public confidence that are of such gravity as to be of national importance, or threats which can be countered effectively or efficiently only by national policing capabilities. Chief officers must have regard to the SPR in exercising their functions.

- 8 These are specialists who give a service to victims who have experienced rape and sexual assault, irrespective of whether they have reported to the police; the nature of the support provided varies, depending on the needs of the individual and their particular circumstances; provide impartial information to the victims about all of their options, such as reporting to the police, and accessing specialist support such as pre-trial therapy and sexual violence counselling; also provide information on other services that victims may require, for example in relation to health and social care, housing, or benefits.
- 9 This is guidance and advice provided to the police by a CPS lawyer in serious, sensitive or complex cases, or any case where a police supervisor considers it would be of assistance. It is meant to be given at a very early stage of a case, to help decide what evidence will be required to support a prosecution, and to decide if a case can proceed to court.
